public office. As a reformer, consistency. would require him to find some other fault with appointments their that the appointees were Republicans of Democrata. but consistency was never much of a newel with professional reformers, and so Mr Roosevelt goes to St I outs to assent one of the most respected leaders of his own party a sharer with himself in the distribution of the apolls of the Repub lican victory of 383 one going to the Postoffice Departs ent and the other to the Civil Service Commission, although Mr. Received the more tenscious voluntarily resigned months ago with the most cordial expressions of estrem from all his associates in the Administration from the President down

And in making this attack be does And in making mis attach be does not H N FAIRBANKS, - General Agent appointed bad mer or incompetent men as postmasters—only that he appointed Republicans Of course Mr Roosevelt could offer no good reason for giving the benefit of life appointments to the Democrats who were put in by t leveland in the man ner that he so strongly denounces when the beneficiaries are Republicans So he begs that question entirely ignores the lean sweep by the Cere clamors in a general and diffusive way against the 'spoils system and vents his vocabulary upon Ceneral Clarkson who simply administered the policy of the Ad ministration in his department

Mr Rooseveit must know that President Harrison would score to affect ignorance of the changes made in the fourth lass post offices or to pretend that they were made contrary to he will of the executive, and yet Mr Roosevelt is willing to hold on to his own office under the President who sanctioned the very acts and policy for which he is feady to stand up in a civil service reform club and abuse Mr. Clarkson We don't think that sort of beroics will excite much enthusiasm among the people who cast the Republian votes that enabled Mr Roosevelt to obtain prominente as a Republican office-

In accusing Mr Clarkson of holding that he and his friends "ought to be paul by office for supporting the party, Mr Roosevelt indulges in an unwarranted and naworthy imputation, the gratinity of woich is emphasized by the facts that General Clarkson some time ago relinquished a Federal office with a salary of $4000 per annum, while Mr Commissioner Roosevelt still keeps a tight grip on his own place that pays $3,500

We do not pretend to believe that the salary is what attracts Mr. Roosevelt, because he has inherited great wealth and is not in need of the pay But we may fair ly quote upon him lifs own remark at St.

There is a certain difference between being paid with an office and being paid with money, exactly as there is a certain difference between the savagery of an Ashantee and that of a Hottentot, but it is small in amount."

1 There is a certain difference between being paid with money, exactly as there is a certain difference between the savagery of an Ashantee and that of a Hottentot, but it is small in amount."

And while some benest and earnest Republican, perhaps a disabled veterau, whose father or grandfather did not hand down to him a great fortune ready made, may value even the pittance of a postman ter's salary, Mr. Roesevelt probably finds his "pay" more in the opportunity his office affords of attracting public attention and enabling him to pose in official prominence before the various gatherings of various types of Mugwumps who periodically get together in afferent parts of the intry to worship themselves under the alian of civil service reform. Possibly the Ashantee may take no mere pride in the loin-cloth that constitutes his wardrobe or the Hottentot more pleasure in exhibiting his savage adoruments then is experienced by Mr. Roosevelt in exploiting the peacock athers of an office holder as Civil Service Reform Commissioner at these numerous symposiums of the "superior people" who and their ideal of ewestness and light in H. chine up to comparatively recent time history makes no record of any contrivance of the sort. About seventy years ago a philanthropist in England had constructed on his premises a device with a crank attachment and n hole at the top hig senough to drop a copper penny into the atlair, upon which, if the penny into the atlair, upon which, if the tramp turned the crank for twenty minutes, a lost of briad was thrust out.

This was an ingenious scheme for making the applicant for alms work for his dinner, but probably it was no more popular with medicant stem than it would be today. About twenty years ago the first modern slot machiness made their appearance in Germany, where they are very widely used at present, the French next took them up, and since then they have a pread all over the world.
